New Union Asbury M. E. Church
Freemantown
Public worship

Central to the historic black community of Freemantown is this imposing tee-shaped brick church that stands at the intersection of Main Street Extended and “Freedomtown” Road, east of the City of Crisfield. Built in 1928, the stretcher bond brick church is a distinctive landmark for this crossroads, which is defined otherwise by one- and two-story frame dwellings and modest commercial structures. Raised on a high elevation, the sanctuary is lighted by long colored glass windows featuring pointed arches. A series of three lancet windows pierce each gable end parapet wall. The most dominant architectural element, however, is the three-story entrance and bell tower that rises in the southeast corner of the tee plan. Long flights of concrete steps rise to a pair of double-door openings accented with pointed arch, colored glass transoms.

A marble datestone, fixed in the southeast corner of the foundation, documents the construction of this church in 1928 during the pastorship of Reverend Malachi Raisin. A second datestone is cemented in the southwest corner and was taken from the former church that housed this congregation. It is inscribed “Union Asbury M. E. Church.” Two dates, 1876; and 1902, record when the initial church was erected in the decade following the Civil War on a site south of the present location. As cited on the Lake, Griffing, and Stevenson Atlas (1877), and corroborated by older Freemantown residents, the “Col’d Church” stood several hundred yards south of the crossroads. Evidently the original building was extensively remodeled in 1902 thereby instigating the need for a second date. The current church lot was sold to the Trustees of Union Asbury M. E. Church by Noah C. Sterling in May 1921 for $1000.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The New Union Asbury M. E. Church stands on the northeast corner of the intersection of Main Street Extended and "Freedomtown" Road in the historic black community of Freemantown, east of Crisfield, Somerset County, Maryland. The large single-story, tee-shaped brick church faces south.

Built in 1928, this single-story, tee-shaped brick church is laid in stretcher bond and the steeply pitched roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Standing next to the church on its west side is the church parsonage. (See S-472)

The south front is an asymmetrical gable-front elevation balanced with a three-story entrance and bell tower. The high basement is marked by a series of two-pane cellar windows, and the main level is highlighted by three pointed arch, colored glass windows. The center double lancet window is flanked by narrower lancet windows of colored glass. Each window opening is topped by a rowlock arch set in a pointed shape. The gable end roof is finished with a parapet wall topped by a concrete cap. Fixed in the southeast corner of the foundation is a marble datestone inscribed, "New Union Asbury M. E. Church, Malachi Raisin, Pastor, 1928." A second datestone is fixed in the southwest corner and was evidently salvaged from a former church. It is inscribed, "Union Asbury M. E. Church, 1876, Remodeled 1902."

The south face of the entrance and bell tower is marked by a pointed arch double door entrance featuring a pointed arch colored glass transom. The second level is highlighted by a diamond shaped window filled with colored glass as well, while the third story features a large louvered bell tower opening. The top of the tower is finished with a crenelated wall and concrete capping.

The east side of the church is detailed in a similar fashion with the gable front parapet wall facing Freedomtown Road. A narrow single-flue brick stove chimney rises through the roof. The east face of the entrance and bell tower is identical to the south side.

The north elevation is five bays across with each bay defined by a single width colored glass lancet window. The basement level is pierced by three two-pane windows.

The west side of the church features many of the same architectural elements as the rest of the exterior with pointed arch colored glass windows piercing the main floor. The basement level is marked by a center door and flanking two-pane windows. Rising through the west side is a single-flue brick chimney stack. The west side of the projecting leg of the tee-plan is marked by pointed arch windows as well.

The interior was not seen.
